Pro ship that he was remain to the bitter end. Those versed in sea lore, however, think of a ship scudding under bare poles (being blown along by the wind, although all sails are furled) and rapidly approaching a rock-bound coast.

As a last measure to save destruction the anchors are dropped. Since all depends on the stability of the anchors, every fathom of cable is let out, so that the pull will be more nearly horizontal than vertical, and the anchors will not tend to be pulled up. The cable is fastened to great posts built into the ship, called "bitts," hence the anchor, when let out to the greatest extent of the cable, is said to be "paid out to the bitter end."

Some people talk in their sleep because the thought centers happen to get in touch with the speech centers. But enough of the brain is out of commission to permit sleep.

FOR THE GOOSE—

ONE way to know if you're living right, is if life tastes pretty good to you, and still you wouldn't want to go back and do any of it over again.

What the average woman calls being in love, is finding somebody that seems as if he might fit the permanent vacancy in her dreams.

Every woman feels she has a certain amount of stock in any man that's asked her to marry him.

FOR THE GANDER—

Strong men excuse their own faults; weak men brag about them.

Agreeing to do a favor in a disagreeable way makes you more disliked than refusing to do it in an agreeable way.

Fumble your alibi don't look half as suspicious as being too glib with it.

You got no more excuse for being too busy to look after your health than an aviator has got being too occupied with flying to look after his engine.
